Livingston's first appointive office was alef clerk of the Bureau of Elections, om which position he was promoted 1905 by Jacob Brenner, Commisoner of Jurors, to be a deputy commisoner of jurors, succeeding Frank J. ardner, who was elected to the Senate.

Livingston's influence immediately be-

Livingston to resign as deputy, and made the public statement that Livingston had "broken his word" and he "no lenger could trust him."

Woodruff then called together Livingston's district captains for the purpose of ousting him from the district leadership. But Livingston apparently had beat him to the poat, for when Woodriff got done telling the district captains what to do about their leader they promptly told Woodruff that there would be no new deputy commissioner of jurors. And there wasn't. Within the week, Livingston was back on the job with Brenner, and the next year Brenner reappointed him for another term.

By 1910 Woodruff had moved to Manhattan and had become interested in so many other matters than the Kings County leadership that a number of the more influential Republicans in Brooklyn began to think they could get along without him. It was then that the F. J. H. Kracke-Calder combine began to take the ascendancy. As a result of their judgment Woodruff resigned, and the affairs of the party in Kings went into the hands of a regency composed of Kracke, Calder, Livingston and others, with Marcus B. Campbell as executive chairman. A little later the "regency" brought Woodruff back into Livingston was born in Ulster county.

New York, in 1870. His parents brought him to Brooklyn to flue when he was a years old and he received his education in the public schools of East, New York, where he has resided continuously formore than lorty years. He was a bright maker by trade. He is married and is a member of numerous cubbs and south, pollitical and fraternal organizations, including the Royal Arcanum and the Concerdia Singling Society.

Livingston's influence immediately began to spread and he made it felt, particularly in efforts to gain jurisdiction over additional territory in the redistricting of Kings, in which he partially succeeded. From that day to this Livingston has been noted for the extreme fealousy with which he regards his power.

NEWS that apple trees had lost track of the seasons and are blooming again in New Rochelle aroused the sectional pride of power, with County Clerk Charles S. Devoy as executive chairman.

Then in 1912 came the Buil Moose explosion, and Woodruff quit the party to support Roosevelt. At the Chicago convention Devoy jumped to Roosevelt, and upon his return to Brooklyn declared he did not feel he should remain at the head of the regular county organization. He quit, and on June 29, 1912, Livingston was unanimously elected chairman of the Kings County Republican executive committee for the Girst time.
